THE JAMES A. “JIM” McAULEY DISTINGUISHED ENGINEERING STUDENT AWARD

The Texas Tech University Whitacre College of Engineering Dean’s Council is the sponsor of the McAuley Distinguished Engineering Student Award. This prestigious award recognizes the most outstanding graduating Texas Tech engineering student. The recipient possesses superior academic credentials and personal values, and has displayed a high degree of professionalism.

The McAuley Award is given in memory of Jim McAuley – Texas Tech alumnus, member of the College of Engineering Dean’s Council, Distinguished Engineer, educator, and positive influence on those whose lives he touched.

Those who knew Jim McAuley best, his employees and associates, had only high praise for his ability and integrity. By placing the interests of those who work for and with him first, and by setting and maintaining the highest standards of ethics and moral character for himself, he earned their loyalty and respect. Mr. McAuley possessed an endless sense of humor as well as the determination and natural leadership abilities necessary in the business world.

McAuley graduated from Texas Tech with a degree in petroleum engineering in 1953, and served with several oil companies before becoming president of Halliburton Resource Management, initiating company involvement in oil field service rentals. He founded ENOPCO (Energy Operating Corporation) in 1977, and served on the board of directors of other oil and gas-related companies.

A native of Andrews, Texas, McAuley attended Texas Tech on a basketball scholarship. In his later years, he was a lecturer in the Petroleum Engineering department at Texas Tech. He held several patents for drilling- and production-related technology and was involved in research for removing hydrogen sulfide from produced well streams.
