The Opportunity

Texas Tech University-Costa Rica is accepting applications for a full-time faculty position to contribute to the English writing and oral communications programs at Texas Tech’s new campus in Costa Rica. The successful candidate will teach undergraduate writing and professional communication courses. Working in coordination with the Department of English in Lubbock and the academic leadership in Costa Rica, the successful candidate will also contribute to the Texas Tech-Costa Rica’s mission through university service, program developing, and applied research, assisting in the development of Texas Tech-Costa Rica’s footprint in Central America.

The successful candidate will be appointed as a full-time lecturer on the Texas Tech University-Costa Rica campus with a simultaneous adjunct appointment at the appropriate rank in the Texas Tech University Department of English.

Responsibilities

• Teach a full load of first year writing and professional communication courses.
• Advise and mentor students.
• Contribute to Texas Tech-Costa Rica’s academic and co-curricular development through service, program development and applied research, etc.
• Work closely with the Department of English at Texas Tech University in Lubbock to assure Costa Rica’s attainment of desired learning outcomes.

Qualifications

• A terminal degree English, Rhetoric, Communication, Technical Communication, or a related field.
• A strong teaching record and a demonstrable commitment to teaching university-level writing courses.
• Evidence of capacity to contribute to the development of a new campus through program building, student development, community outreach, or applied research.
• Native or near-native competency in the English language.
• Academic or professional experience that would qualify the candidate to teach business communication.

Compensation

Salary commensurate with experience.
