Notes: Prerequisite: 6 hrs of 2000-level English. May be repeated once when topics vary.

This course offers a survey of early English literature from circa 1066 to 1400 AD, from King Arthur to Chaucer, from chronicle to romance, from saints to merchants. In this course we will read literary works analytically, paying particular attention to the overlap between the genres of romance and saint’s life. We will also explore the cultural contexts of early writings including their original placement in handwritten manuscripts. By the end of this course, the student should be able to mount an argument and support it effectively and correctly with textual evidence, both orally and in writing. Students will be expected to complete one short analytical essay, a longer research essay, a midterm, and a final. Weekly written responses, occasional quizzes, one oral presentation, and active class participation will also be required. Attendance is mandatory. 7 absences will earn an F for the course.

The course will focus on two writers from the romantic period before the Civil War and two from the realist period after it, yet we will also discuss how these writers serve as precursors to the modernist movement that will dominate the twentieth century. Topics will include history, religion, adventure, gender relations, diversity, and social class. In addition to discussion and daily work (reading quizzes, informal written responses), students will write four short (4pp.) interpretive essays and take a comprehensive final essay exam.

This course will examine late 20th century and early 21st century fictions and some dramas, that address war and unjust punishment. It will also study the healing antidotes to those traumas in art, nature, religion, work, relationships, and sports. A few of the literary works contain all of these healing agents, all manifest some of them. We will read Pasternak's Doctor Zhivago about the Russian Revolution, Remarque's All Quiet on the Western Front concerning World War One from the German soldier's viewpoint. We will read Naslund's Four Spirits set in Birmingham in the Civil Rights era, and Allende's The House of the Spirits that treats the Pinochet regime in Chile. Two Viet Nam novels will take diverse points of view: Bao Ninh's Sorrow of War told from the north Viet Nam soldier's eyes and The Lotus Eaters narrated by a Western female journalist. Finally, Dave Eggers' Zeitoun gives an immediate impression of Hurricane Katrina's devastation in New Orleans in 2005. Students will write a film/literature essay, with a research component, comparing the film and fictional version of a character. There will be weekly quizzes on the readings, an oral presentation of the student's choice within a specific selection of fiction and drama, as well as a midterm and a final. The attendance policy starts on the first day of class. One absence is allowed without penalty unless it falls on a quiz, presentation, or exam date. Five unexcused absences result in failure of the class.

Our goal will be to ask what Montaigne asked nearly 500 years ago: “What do I know?” To that end we will read a wide variety of creative nonfiction, past and present, and we will write a fair amount as well.  We will explore how different approaches to the personal essay and other genres of creative nonfiction affect us as writers and readers as well as consider what we can learn about ourselves and our worldview by writing and reading creative nonfiction.  We will discuss and experience the significance of a true story well told, and we will discover ways to navigate our memories, our families, our communities, and the vast world of information in order to put together stories that are both emotionally and factually as true as we can make them.  Students will write three personal essays in a variety of forms.  In addition students will keep an active Twitter account, complete outside reading requirements, review literary magazines, participate in classroom workshops, and students will turn in a final portfolio.

The purpose of English 3365 is to prepare you for writing as a professional person. It focuses on gathering information and presenting it to specific audiences. The assignments include a library/internet guide, an annotated bibliography, a recommendation report, a progress report, a proposal, and an oral report. You will learn uses, purposes, conventions, and structures for the reports and the proposal. You will also learn strategies for producing such documents, including analyzing purpose, gathering data, managing time, and revising. You will also develop your options, including visual and oral presentation and formatting verbal texts, for presenting information. You will review grammar and principles of effective style. All of your work will be on topics of your choosing, preferably related to your major or intended career. For further information please contact the teacher.

This course will provide an upper level, undergraduate introduction to linguistics, which is the study of language. After a brief look at animal communication systems, we will examine the main components of human language – word forms, sounds, and sentence structure – and we will then investigate principles of language variation and language change. Students will also have opportunities for independent explorations of additional aspects of language and linguistics. Our approach will be descriptive rather than prescriptive, and our primary focus will be on the English language. Class meetings will be organized around a lecture-discussion format.

Course Requirements: There will be two tests plus a final exam, and students will also write two papers. Please be aware that attendance is taken beginning with the first day of class.

Notes: Prerequisite: 6 hrs of 2000-level English.
This course will combine the study of science fiction and science. No specialized knowledge is necessary: this is an English literature class. But along with some great novels and movies, we will also study some excellent introductions to contemporary scientific ideas and concepts at the intersections of biology, geology, and cosmology. Reading novels and viewing films alongside popular scientific writings, we will compare fictional narratives that imagine alien planets, peoples, and ecologies with new scientific approaches to the interconnections of Life and Earth—Gaia theory, ecology, astrobiology, geophysiology, and Earth system science. Students will be expected to complete several brief reports, one or two shorter papers, one research paper, a midterm and a final. Frequent absences will result in poor grades. Regular attendance is credited: perfect attendance is credited three points (out of 100); unexcused absences take off a point for every skip after three. Get absences excused before, not after, they occur.

Focuses on the spaces and places where Latino/a identity is shaped and defined: the home, the street, and throughout history. Moving from the private places of the home to the public narratives of history, this course will bring theory and literature into dialogue about the competing definitions of the relationship between Latino/a populations and the U.S. cultural sphere. Topics to be discussed include the construction of identity in terms of race, gender, sexuality, and class; bilingualism, and the experiences of the exile, the immigrant, the refugee and the colonial subject; and the marketing of the Latino/a identity. Readings will focus on writers from various Latino/a groups, including Chicana/os, Cuban Americans and Dominican Americans. Methods of assessment: Daily Quizzes, Reading Responses, Formal Paper, Midterm and Final. Readings: Caballero by Gonzalez & Raleigh; Bless Me Ultima by Anaya; The Devil's Highway by Urrea; Dreaming in Cuban by Garcia; The Brief Wondrous Life of Oscar Wao by Junot Diaz; and Coursepack readings.

For Spring 2012, English 3388 will study award-winning Hollywood films so that we can gain an understanding of what makes these films great and how these films communicate. By learning how the selected films communicate, we will gain a better understanding of how all films communicate. We will lay out contemporary Hollywood's most important and typical narrative strategies (which are in most respects the same as those in use during the 1930s) and then examine recent films to show how those strategies are used in practice. To accomplish these tasks, we will consider film language, the director's goals, and, when appropriate, the cultural and social milieu. We want to discover why Americans spent more than $25.8 billion on movie tickets alone last year. That's a lot of money just to hold hands, drink cokes, and eat popcorn in the dark. Students will be expected to complete quizzes, short papers, presentation, final, and objective midterm. Students are allowed three absences

This course will approach the complex cinematic category of film noir from multiple perspectives, encompassing historical, ideological, aesthetic, technological, and feminist approaches to studies of film. Students will develop skills in both formal analysis and historical research that are specific to film studies and explore a variety of theoretical approaches to cinema. In addition, we will address noir influences in other media including television, video games and graphic novels. Areas of focus will include the theoretical and historical challenges of defining “film noir”, influences of European film and art traditions and their manifestation in the American film industry, the aesthetic implications of changes in film technology in the post-war period, film noir’s interfaces with other genres and modes of filmmaking such as science fiction and documentary, and the use of noir aesthetics in contemporary cinema. Texts may include Double Indemnity, Asphalt, The House on 92nd Street, Sin City, L.A. Noire, Twin Peaks, Invasion of the Body Snatchers and Drive, among others. Assessment will be based on a combination of examinations, quizzes, and written assignments. Students are expected to attend all classes. Participation will count for a substantial portion of the final grade. Students are responsible for all course content, including material covered on the first day of class.

Notes: Prerequisite: 6 hrs of 2000-level English.

English 3389-001 is designed to explore the genre of the short story. We will begin our study of the genre by looking at some nineteenth-century examples and trying to see how they reflect the varying tastes of their eras and why they are still regarded as being excellent examples of the genre. After we move on to consider twentieth-century short stories, we will examine topics or themes that have interested short story writers. In our study of the short story, we will read works from various countries and try to determine what themes and topics are particularly well suited to the genre. We will, from time to time, ask what is distinctive about the short story. As time permits, we will see how some short stories have been changed into films and examine some methods of teaching the short story. Although we will read short stories written by a number of authors, we will also spend some time upon the works of Guy De Maupassant and Sherwood Anderson as well as devoting some time to reading Latin American short stories. In addition to reading and studying the assigned works, students will be expected to (1) complete two examinations (involving both objective and essay questions); (2) write two short essays (three to five pages); (3) complete a series of impromptu reading quizzes; (4) complete the final examination. In lieu of one of the short essays, students may choose to present an oral report, or the report may count as an additional grade. Students may miss four classes without any penalty. Each unexcused absence after four will result in a grade reduction by one step; i.e., a B+ will become a B or a B will become a B-. Thus, three unexcused absences will lower students’ grade one letter (i.e., B+ to a C+). This policy applies on the first day that the student is registered for class.

In American popular culture, Viet Nam has usually been represented as a war rather than a country of history and culture. Now thirty-seven years after the fall of Saigon on April 30, 1975, how should we move beyond the Hollywood representation of the war and cultivate new understandings of the country and the people? This course aims to offer a balanced view of the war from the diverse perspectives of Euro-Americans, Vietnamese, as well as Americans of Vietnamese descent, taking into consideration the history, people, and culture of Viet Nam. We will explore different genres that encompass prose fiction, drama, poetry, film, song lyric, as well as oral history, and discuss authors with diverse racial, gender, class, and cultural backgrounds. Students will be expected to complete two research papers, two exams and five pop quizzes. A strict attendance policy kicks in from the first day a student is registered in the class.

works “Boz.” Though some sneer that Dickens’s long novels are evidence that he was “paid by the word,” they do not know that this literary giant was an irrevocably wounded man: scarred by childhood neglect, shamed by his father’s imprisonment, disappointed in love, and obsessed with achieving a level of literary success that would erase his secret pain. His works are important in themselves for students of literature, but they are also a window onto the private identity of a man whose life was essentially tragic, defined by early traumas reworked and rewritten through thirty years as England’s preeminent novelist.

During our semester, we will read four of Dickens’s most acclaimed novels—most likely Oliver Twist, David Copperfield, Great Expectations, and The Mystery of Edwin Drood—as well as excerpts from his private letters, parts of biographies, and relatively unknown specimens of his short fiction.

Assignments will include a brief (2-pp.) reader response essay on each novel, a 5-7 pp. critical essay, an annotated bibliography, a research paper of 10-12 pp., and a short group presentation.

Octavia Butler (1947-2006) was the foremost African-American feminist author of science fiction of her time, and is one of the great American writers of speculative fiction, period. In this class, we will study and discuss the development of her writing, giving our main attention to her novel-length works of prose fiction. In the process, students will locate and analyze specimens of the critical literature on Butler. In response, through oral class reports integrated with essay assignments, students will practice their own critical skills. Students will be expected to complete several brief reports, one or two shorter papers, one research paper, a midterm and a final. Frequent absences will result in poor grades. Regular attendance is credited: perfect attendance is credited three points (out of 100); unexcused absences take off a point for every skip after three. The Eighteenth Century Gothic Novel

Notes: Prerequisite: 6 hrs of 3000-level English. May be repeated once when topics vary.

Haunted castles, vengeful ghosts, scheming villains, imprisoned heroines, secrets from the mysterious past, fearful apparitions, gory deaths, live burials—not to mention the terrified, fascinated reader: these trappings are usually taken to be the signs of the Gothic. But why did Gothic texts become so popular in the late eighteenth century (and beyond)? What kinds of social, cultural, historical, or psychological demands did it fulfill for its readers? How does this subgenre fit into our understanding of the novel as a genre? To explore these questions, we’ll read novels from the late eighteenth century heyday of the Gothic. The goals of the course include helping students do the following: learn to apply course material in interpreting texts, learn to find and use resources through research, develop skill in writing, and learn to analyze and critically evaluate ideas and arguments. Course work will include a presentation, short papers, an annotated bibliography, and a longer research paper. Note that absences accrue from the first day of class regardless of registration status.

The following stipulations are subject to change. Any changes will be announced in class.

This offering of English 4373 will have two primary and interrelated aims: first, to enable students to learn about linguistic approaches to literature and, second, to learn how to investigate and analyze language in literature. This course will include some background lectures but will generally operate more as a seminar with discussions of readings related to textual analysis.

Students should understand from the outset that this is an untidy field in the sense there is no one dominant theoretical approach governing it. Students should also understand from the outset that the professor-generated materials will focus on the analysis of fiction through close readings and textual analysis. Students are welcome, however, to pursue interests in other genres (poetry, drama, non-fiction prose, and so on) and other methods.

We will begin the semester with some historical context on stylistics, we will survey various twentieth and twenty-first century approaches to the course topic, and we will consider where the field is headed next. We will examine the political and intellectual interfaces between linguistics and literature. We will look together as a class at selected examples of fiction in order to understand the two-way street of what literature has to offer linguistic study and what linguistics has to offer literary study.

Course Requirements:

Each student will apply course concepts in a substantive paper investigating language in a text (of fiction, poetry, drama, or nonfiction prose) of his or her choice and will give an oral presentation about that paper to the class.

Each student will lead discussions of assigned essays from the textbooks on language in literature/stylistics/discourse analysis/linguistic approaches to literature.

Each student will lead discussions of other journals and essays dealing with language in literature.

Each student will develop a Blackboard journal with informal notes and observations on the readings and presentations. Each student should plan to post at least twice a week and also to comment regularly on others’ posts. (No special technical expertise will be needed to complete this requirement.)

Depending on students’ needs and abilities, we may have one or two tests in the class, or we may substitute the weekly postings for one or both of the tests; which path to follow will be determined at the beginning of the class.

Textbooks:

Other course materials may be posted on Blackboard, and we will also plan to read some fiction together as a class, possibly novels such as A Lesson Before Dying, Face of an Angel, or The Great Gatsby.
