Student life at Texas Tech University is a strong blend of academic, social, and personal development. While clearly, activity in classrooms, laboratories, studios, libraries, and the field engage students in their essential academic experiences, these experiences are augmented or further enriched by the services offered by the offices and departments in Texas Tech’s Division of Undergraduate Education and Student Affairs. From assistance with and decisions about standardized tests to earn course credit, to finding opportunities to participate in and present undergraduate research, to enjoying community and influence in student government or service organizations, the academic, social, and personal development of students are well blended through these sorts of opportunities. The division’s 2010-2011 Report to the Provost highlights not only the key achievements of these units for the academic year, but also the significant potential yet to be realized by the strategic realignment of Student Affairs within the broad structure of Academic Affairs. Under the capable leadership of Vice Provost Juan Munoz, the excellent directors and staff of the division plan and deliver their programs with the utmost professionalism. The outcomes highlighted in this report are a reflection of these professionals’ dedication to Texas Tech’s strategic priorities in support of student success and academic quality. We look forward to continuing excellent outcomes building from those reported here.
