As the soldiers return to Messina to take up their civilian lives, the after-shocks of the war affect them and the people they care about. Benedick and Beatrice, former lovers, swear they will never reconcile, while their friends make other plans for them. Claudio, battle weary, wonders if Hero will have him for a husband. Don John bitterly plots trouble for them all, while the bumbling town guards may or may not foil his evil scheme. Shakespeare’s comic masterpiece is also a bittersweet battle of the sexes.
