

How I Became an Independent Consultant (Without Really Trying)

Mark Darby

Becoming a consultant typically happens without it being a concrete goal. The key is doing the things in your career that form the basis for a consulting business later. This talk will discuss how I got into consulting, lessons learned along the way, and the skills that are important in successful consulting. It will highlight my area of expertise Process Control, the types of engagements, and also my research interests.