Texas Medieval Association (TEMA):

28th Annual Meeting, TTU October 25-27

Thursday events will include an afternoon public symposium related to "Pre-Modern Bibles: from the Dead Sea Scrolls to Complutensian Polyglot Bible, an exhibit of original manuscripts and facsimiles displayed at the Museum of Texas Tech University. Frans and Kate Van Liere, from Calvin College, will speak on the medieval study of the Bible and on the Spanish Renaissance context of the Complutensian Polyglot Bible.

Friday events, centered at the Museum of Texas Tech University, will include multiple interdisciplinary sessions on things medieval and Renaissance, a plenary address by Professor Timothy Graham, director of the University of New Mexico Institute for Medieval Studies and winner of the Medieval Academy's 2016 excellence in teaching award. The conference day will close with a convivial reception within the Bible exhibit.

Saturday's events will be held in the TTU central campus. There will be more research presentations and panels, a plenary address by George Greenia, Emeritus professor of Spanish at William and Mary, on "The Camino de Santiago and Medieval Pilgrim Libraries," and a TEMA Business luncheon and presidential address.

The formal call for papers will be sent out in spring of 2018, but scholars with proposals for sessions and for papers are welcome now to contact conference organizer John Howe (John.Howe@ttu.edu). Sessions related to Spanish medieval and renaissance themes are encouraged, as are those on all aspects of medieval and renaissance studies.

For further information, see the TEMA website.