Appendix C Graduate Student Handbook

The content and use of Graduate Student Handbooks are currently under review. Faculty members are working to focus the materials in the handbooks and to make them more user friendly. Some of this will be accomplished by developing a common college handbook, thus allowing for tighter more focused program-level ones. Although the following Department of Curriculum and Instruction Graduate Student Handbooks are under review and being updated, they may be viewed online by following the hyperlinks below.

Individuals seeking the doctoral degree (Ph.D.) in Curriculum and Instruction are able to study in one of five concentrations: Bilingual/ESL Education, Curriculum Studies/Teacher Education, Language and Literacy Education, Physical Education and Sports Science, and Science and Mathematics Education. The doctoral handbook may be reviewed online. Master's level handbooks may be reviewed through the following hyperlinks.

Graduate Student Association

The College of Education

Education Graduate Student Organization

The Education Graduate Student Organization's mission is to:

- foster communication between students, faculty, and administration;
- provide a means for representing graduate student concerns and distributing information; and
- facilitate and support the graduate student experience in the College of Education.

This mission is advanced by:

- connecting graduate students with researchers working in their fields of interest;
- finding support for research and publications;
- educating about job search processes and opportunities;
- providing information about graduate student issues; and
- helping utilize resources in the College of Education.

Fall 2010 membership is approximately 35 graduate students. Monthly meeting focusing on professional development, including such topics as the academic job search, cooperative teaching in higher education, online teaching, and networking at conferences. The organization conducts a new graduate student orientation for the college, and members regularly volunteer in the community.
