Notes: Prerequisite: 6 hrs of 2000-level English. May be repeated once when topics vary.

This course offers a survey of early English literature from circa 1066 to 1400 AD, from King Arthur to Chaucer, from chronicle to romance, from saints to merchants. In this course we will read literary works analytically, paying particular attention to the overlap between the genres of romance and saint’s life. We will also explore the cultural contexts of early writings including their original placement in handwritten manuscripts. By the end of this course, the student should be able to mount an argument and support it effectively and correctly with textual evidence, both orally and in writing. Students will be expected to complete one short analytical essay, a longer research essay, a midterm, and a final. Weekly written responses, occasional quizzes, one oral presentation, and active class participation will also be required. Attendance is mandatory. 7 absences will earn an F for the course.

TEXTS:

ALSO: E-reserve and online readings. Computer access (internet and email) required for this course.

This course explores English writers and texts from approximately 1485 to 1660, or the accession of Henry VII to the restoration of Charles II. From this “Golden Age” of literature come some of our most famous authors, such as William Shakespeare, John Donne, John Milton, and many others. Famous monarchs and courtiers—such as Queen Elizabeth I and Sir Walter Raleigh—were poets as well. We will consider in chronological order works that represent various literary forms and genres, as well as the contexts (historical, political, religious, bibliographical, etc.) in which they were composed and disseminated in manuscript and/or print, sometimes without authorial intervention. Much of our class time will be devoted to explication of texts and to discussion of issues that they raise, such as Renaissance humanism and imitatio, religious reformations, colonization and the New World, and the “purpose” of literature, to name only a few.

This course will survey American literature and culture from the arrival of the Puritans through the early national period. As we read texts both political and literary – categories that were not as distinct in early America as they perhaps are today – we will pay particular attention to how they pose questions about the meaning of selfhood, liberty, and slavery in colonial America and in the new nation. While doing so, we will also contemplate the forms of community and spirituality that early Americans pursued; consider what Revolutionary ideals and post-Revolutionary politics meant to women and men, free and enslaved, Indian and white, rich and poor, urban and rural; examine the meaning and limitations of "Enlightenment" ideals in the Atlantic world; and

This course will focus on the period of the nineteenth century in America, in the early expansion and removal of frontier population that produced voices from Native American and Spanish American peoples. It will proceed to the cultures of New England that inspired Emerson, Fuller and Thoreau. We will read Hawthorne’s Puritan tales, Poe’s gothic stories and their atmospheric precedent in Washington Irving. Then the course will center upon the Civil War, through the readings of Harriet Jacobs’ Incidents in the Life of a Slave Girl, as well as Frederick Douglass’ Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass, An American Slave. We will read the observations of Louisa May Alcott upon her service as a Civil War nurse in “My Contraband,” and the Civil War stories of Ambrose Bierce. Next we will study Charles Chestnutt, other black authors, and the critical visions of post bellum America in the Realist Kate Chopin. The Naturalists Stephen Crane, Jack London and Upton Sinclair will be succeeded by currents of globalization spelled out in the works of Wells, Nast and Latina activist writers, as well as Mary Austin, Bonnin and Eaton. Major and minor poets of the century will be included. The requirements include weekly quizzes on the readings, an oral presentation, a midterm, a final, and a seven page paper with a research component on the Civil War, based upon a Bierce film/fiction contrast. The films will be shown in class. The attendance policy starts on the first day of class. Two absences are allowed without penalty unless they fall upon quiz, presentation, or exam dates. Five unexcused absences result in failure of the class.

Nineteenth Century American Literature
Realism in the Novel

TR 11-12:20 PM
John Samson
john.samson@ttu.edu
EN 481

Realism, the dominant literary movement in the last half of the nineteenth century, involves many of the greatest novelists of the period. We will begin by examining how the movement developed out of and in opposition to romanticism, then read and discuss some of the major works of the period. Issues of gender and class will be the primary focus of most of the novels, but they also confront individualism, ethnicity, religion, and economics. Students will write three short (3-4pp.) papers and take a comprehensive final exam.

Texts: Herman Melville, Redburn (1849); Fanny Fern, Ruth Hall (1855) Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, The Silent Partner (1870); Mark Twain, The Adventures of Tom Sawyer (1876); Henry Adams, Democracy (1880); William Dean Howells, A Hazard of New Fortunes (1890); and Harold Frederic, The Damnation of Theron Ware (1896).

This course explores how contemporary American authors articulate their own visions and understandings of American culture and society in response to the social, political, cultural, and technological changes since the 1960s. Focusing on what has been known as postmodern American literature in its domestic and global contexts, we begin by reading texts that engage the technological changes in American society and discuss the ways in which these authors question and negotiate this new sense of humanity manifested in these changes. We then scrutinize writings of racial minorities and women and explore the new critical vigor and sensibilities that they have enriched American literature and culture. As a gesture of conclusion, we finally investigate texts that speculate upon the possibility of a post-ethnic and post-human society in America in the twenty-first century. Students will be expected to complete two essays, five pop quizzes, a midterm and a final. There is a strict attendance policy and it kicks in from the first day a student is registered in the class.

Texts:

Don DeLillo, White Noise.

David Henry Hwang, M. Butterfly.

An intense creative writing class focused on the writing/reading of poetry. To do well in this class, one should be a reader of books but one need not aspire to be a writer of books. Students must have strong general reading (analysis) and writing (grammatical) skills. This class will involve a special collaboration with Art Professor Dirk Fowler which will result in a public exposition of a poem in some artistic format. This is a studio class in which we will write a lot of poems and exercises, and we will read much more than we write. Professional Report Writing

Notes: Prerequisite: Junior standing.

The purpose of English 3365 is to prepare you for writing as a professional person. It focuses on gathering information and presenting it to specific audiences. The assignments include a library/internet guide, an annotated bibliography, a recommendation report, a progress report, a proposal, and an oral report. You will learn uses, purposes, conventions, and structures for the reports and the proposal. You will also learn strategies for producing such documents, including analyzing purpose, gathering data, managing time, and revising. You will also develop your options, including visual and oral presentation and formatting verbal texts, for presenting information. You will review grammar and principles of effective style. All of your work will be on topics of your choosing, preferably related to your major or intended career. For further information please contact the teacher.

Notes: Prerequisite: 6 hrs of 2000-level English.

This course will provide an upper level, undergraduate introduction to linguistics, which is the study of language. After a brief look at animal communication systems, we will examine the main components of human language – word forms, sounds, and sentence structure – and we will then investigate principles of language variation and language change. Students will also have opportunities for independent explorations of additional aspects of language and linguistics. Our approach will be descriptive rather than prescriptive, and our primary focus will be on the English language. Class meetings will be organized around a lecture-discussion format.

Course Requirements: There will be two tests plus a final exam, and students will also write two papers. Please be aware that attendance is taken beginning with the first day of class.

- This course provides an overview of the structure and usage of Modern American English. The material covered in the course will be relevant to anyone who wishes to obtain a basic knowledge of the form and function of Modern American English or human language structure in general. But it will be particularly suitable for teachers at the public school level. Topics to be covered will include but are not limited to: basic word structure, classification of words into what are traditionally known as "parts of speech", description and analysis of various sentence structures, prescriptive versus descriptive approaches to English grammar, particularly in the context of appropriate usage (e.g., written vs. spoken language), stylistic, and dialectal variation in syntax, and grammaticalization, a process in which a lexical item loses its original meaning to serve the needs of grammar (e.g., pronouns, modal auxiliary verbs, complementizers). Major requirements for this course will be (i) three exams, (ii) a research paper on the topic relevant to the course and (iii) an oral report on the paper at the end of semester. There will be a strict attendance policy but it will not kick in on the first day of classes.

English 3388 will study award-winning Hollywood films so that we can gain an understanding of what makes these films great and how these films communicate. By learning how the selected films communicate, we will gain a better understanding of how all films communicate. We will lay out contemporary Hollywood’s most important and typical narrative strategies (which are in most respects the same as those in use during the 1930s) and then examine recent films to show how those strategies are used in practice. To accomplish these tasks, we will consider film language, and, when appropriate, the cultural and social milieu. Students will be expected to complete six quizzes, a presentation, one short paper, a midterm, one long paper, and a final exam. The attendance policy begins on the 3rd class meeting.

<td>English 3388 introduces students to the major genres in cinema, and this section will focus on fictive-narrative films. English 3389.001

Notes: Prerequisite: 6 hrs of 2000-level English.

English 3389-001 is designed to explore the genre of the short story. We will begin our study of the genre by looking at some nineteenth-century examples and trying to see how they reflect the varying tastes of their eras and why they are still regarded as being excellent examples of the genre. After we move on to consider twentieth-century short stories, we will examine topics or themes that have interested short story writers. In our study of the short story, we will read works from various countries and try to determine what themes and topics are particularly well suited to the genre. We will, from time to time, ask what is distinctive about the short story. As time permits, we will see how some short stories have been changed into films and examine some methods of teaching the short story. Although we will read short stories written by a number of authors, we will also spend some time upon the works of Guy De Maupassant and Sherwood Anderson as well as devoting some time to reading Latin American short stories. In addition to reading and studying the assigned works, students will be expected to (1) complete two examinations (involving both objective and essay questions); (2) write two short essays (three to five pages); (3) complete a series of impromptu reading quizzes; (4) complete the final examination. In lieu of one of the short essays, students may choose to present an oral report, or the report may count as an additional grade. Students may miss four classes without any penalty. Each unexcused absence after four will result in a grade reduction by one step; i.e., a B+ will become a B or a B will become a B-. Thus, three unexcused absences will lower students’ grade one letter (i.e., B+ to a C+). This policy applies on the first day that the student is registered for class.

Course number normally used for individual/independent studies arranged between an English professor and a student. Students must have already completed a course with the instructor. The instructor is not obligated to agree to supervise the independent study. The student will normally have a topic in mind and will approach the instructor for feasibility. A form, which may be picked up in EN 211C, must be filled out and approved by the Chair of the English Department. The form is then delivered to 211C and the advisor enrolls the student. The teacher submits the grade to the Chair for posting.

Notes: Prerequisite: 6 hrs of 3000-level English. May be repeated once when topics vary.

This course will focus on the novels of London and Cather from 1900 to 1918. Although the two would first appear to be widely different, they share many similar cultural and aesthetic concerns. In reading and discussing the novels we will examine gender issues, nature, the pioneer spirit, and emerging modernism. Students will write three short (4-5pp.), interpretive papers and a longer (8-10pp.) research essay.

This course focuses on counter-narratives of nation-making and identity in Mexican-American, Chicana/o, and Euro-American conceptions of U.S.-Mexico borderland places and spaces to critique the centrality of landscape, human geography, and sustainable patterns of being-in-the-world in terms of national and/or regional identities. In order to uncover complex negotiations within and between competing cultures, societies, and subjectivities along the U.S-Mexico border in the region known as the American Southwest, we will explore foundational borderlands fictions by such diverse authors as Larry McMurtry, Cormac McCarthy, Jovita González and Eve Raleigh, Américo Paredes, Mary Austin, and Helena Maria Viramontes as well as consider essays and articles that engage current theoretical and critical debates in the field of social and cultural geography, border theory, ecocritical theory, and third space feminism. Questions that will focus our discussion include: How does the Southwestern landscape factor, or fracture identity among different cultures? How is the sense of this region imagined across cultures, histories, and into the globalized present? How do current ecocritical models intertwine with border theory, and third space feminist theories of the body?

This is an intensive class devoted to advancing techniques of poetry writing. We will approach it from several angles: reading and studying published poems of various styles, focused lessons and exercises, and--mostly--writing, discussing, and revising your own poems.

The minimum prerequisite is having taken ENGL 3351: Creative Writing, in poetry. It is preferable if you've also taken ENGL 3351 in another genre as well.

If you've met the prerequisite, then to obtain PERMISSION OF THE INSTRUCTOR to enroll, send three or four of your best poems, preferably as an email attachment in MS Word, to Dr. Wenthe at william.wenthe@ttu.edu

ENGLISH 4360.001
Notes: Prerequisite: 6 hrs of 3000-level English. May be repeated once when topics vary.

The course will explore the goals and techniques of non-fiction writing, specifically expository and persuasive writing. Expository writing—also known as referential writing—is that which is used to inform the reader; examples include newspaper articles, online Wikipedia entries, business memos, or scientific reports. Persuasive writing can be anything from a sermon or an editorial to the typical freshman composition essay advocating legalization of drugs. In this course we will ask what characterizes these two types of non-fiction writing and how they function to inform us or move us to action. Included will be discussions of writing style and argumentative logic and strategies for teaching this kind of writing. We will analyze various examples as found in written and online texts. Books we may use include Alec Fisher’s The Logic of Real Arguments and Joseph Williams’ Style: Ten Lessons in Clarity and Grace. The class will occur in four ways:

- Class lectures, discussions, and activities.

- Student led classes on the style lessons.

- Written postings. Students will write responses to the class readings and post some homework as assigned. Each posting will go to our electronic bulletin board or to the professor by email.

- Midterm and final exam

Literary and Technical Writing about Oil, Water and Agriculture in Texas
Notes: Prerequisite: ENGL 3365 or consent of instructor. May be repeated once when topics vary.

This course will examine various historical and present day writings about Texas culture and environment, particularly relating to the oil industry, water issues, and agriculture. We will examine various writing genres to ask how Texans and non-Texans have understood the state’s unique business and environmental history. For instance, we will survey briefly oil drilling in Texas from historical texts, folklore from the oil fields, and technical documents that accompanied and made possible the oil boom. We will consider a similar range of writings about water policy as it relates to ranching and agriculture—and the challenges we all face today as water resources become scarcer. The premise of this course is that the relationship between business, culture, and the environment is best understood by considering writings in various genres. We will examine technical documents against a backdrop of historical and literary writings to discern the ways in which texts of all types helped bring about the Texas environment and culture as we know it today. The course will also consider planning texts that look toward future environmental challenges that Texans face. This course will require regular attendance, reading of technical, literary, and historical documents as well as short response papers and a research project. Students from various disciplines, and not only from Texas, will benefit from seeing how a state’s environmental and business history is represented in different types of writing. Reading will include coursepack articles and several books to be determined.

Language and Community (ENGL 4371) is a service-learning course that aims to combine theory with practice: it addresses controversial issues such as how ideologies about race play out in language and how language is a vehicle for empowerment for marginalized groups in the context of multiculturalism. Students will be acquiring first-hand experience in diversity and team-building by working with non-native speakers of English in pairs or teams. This course fulfills a requirement for a linguistics minor as well. The course will be organized around individual tutoring sessions with non-native speakers of English and weekly meetings with the professor and/or other peers for discussion, debriefing, and debate over theory versus practice or any other relevant issues. Throughout the semester, students will keep weekly journals or blogs on their tutoring and their growth as intellectuals/potential educators. At the end of semester, students will submit a final research paper, and/or a self-reflective essay on one’s tutoring experience and assessments on other tutors’ performances. This course offers a great way to contribute to our community, to experience diversity in Lubbock, to work on communication skills, and to work for a more just and equitable society.

Senior Seminar

This seminar provides the capstone course for English Majors concentrating in Literature & Language or in Teacher Certification for Grades 8-12 in English/Language Arts. Through our reading, thinking, discussing, and writing, we will focus on questions such as these:

- What should someone with a baccalaureate degree in English be expected to know?
- What should someone with a baccalaureate degree in English be able to do? Why does the study of language and literature matter? More broadly, how are the humanities and the liberal arts relevant in the twenty-first century and beyond?
- What questions should graduating seniors be asking as they prepare to go forward into the world, and how might we pursue answers to those questions from the perspectives of people who majored in English?

By way of pursuing these questions, students in this section of 4374 will build senior portfolios. To create their portfolios, students should be prepared not only to read, think, and write but also to access and disseminate information through traditional libraries and through various kinds of print and non-print media. A significant portion of the semester will be devoted to learning or reviewing core issues in language and literature, and students will write exams/take tests demonstrating their understanding of language and of literature. Students will also give oral presentations and participate in class discussions and will be expected respond appropriately to classmates’ oral and written presentations and discussion comments.

Although the professor’s plans may change between March (when this course description was written) and August (when the fall semester begins), it is likely that we will read some Harry Potter fiction in this class, so individuals who find Harry Potter objectionable should choose a different class.
