Africa is the continent least understood by Americans; it is often presented by the media as a land of war, famine, and pestilence. This course will present Africa's contemporary reality—the positive as well as the negative—by examining major current issues after briefly surveying Africa's history, geography, societies, and culture. Themes covered will include political dynamics, regional conflicts, human rights and women's issues, economic development and poverty (including the role played by internal assistance), involvement of external forces and globalization, refugees and migration, and environmental and public health crisis (including HIV/AIDS). The course will also examine Africa's role in current U.S. global policy priorities, including U.S. security concerns. The required texts are: Understanding Contemporary Africa (edited by April and Donald Gordon), Things Fall Apart (Chinua Achebe), and supplemental articles designated by the instructor and available in a compendium. This course has writing intensive requirements.

Ambassador (retired) Nagy was most recently US Assistant Secretary of State for Africa. Prior to that he served as Vice Provost for International Affairs at Texas Tech University for 15 years, following a 32-year diplomatic career. During his 22 years at eight African postings he was US Ambassador twice (Ethiopia and Guinea), and Deputy Ambassador four times (Seychelles, Togo, Cameroon and Nigeria). Tibor arrived in the US as a political refugee from Hungary in 1956 and received his BA (History/Political Science) from Texas Tech and MSA (Management) from George Washington. His career awards include commendations for helping prevent famine in Ethiopia; supporting the evacuation of Americans from Sierra Leone during combat; and helping end the Ethio-Eritrean War. Ambassador Nagy lectures nationally on Africa, Development, and US Foreign Policy; contributes periodic op-ed pieces; and co-authored the nonfiction winner of the 2014 Paris Book Festival on managing in difficult international environments, "Kiss Your Latte Goodbye." He is now a Professor Emeritus at Texas Tech.

Graphic Narratives (also known as graphic novels) have become entrenched in our modern-day culture. These narratives are a storytelling device that goes back over a hundred years (with proto-graphic narratives going back thousands of years), but only recently has there been critical acclaim for the medium. Graphic narratives usually combine art and text to convey ideas and stories to actively capture readers' attention since both sides of the brain are engaged when viewing this form of literature. Graphic narratives can convey both non-fiction and fictional storylines and delve deep into a wide variety of genres and topics including captivity stories, social critique, melodrama, the superhero and even thoughtful discussions of race and gender issues. This course will look at graphic narratives as a serious art and literary form from its historical beginnings to the present day. We will critically analyze selected narratives. These include a section on the history of the graphic narrative and theoretical ideas surrounding it. We will also take a deep dive into Jason Lutes Weimar era epic Berlin. In addition, this course studies selected diverse and unique sources showing the potential of graphic narratives. Lastly, we will look at graphic interpretations of sacred and mythological literature including stories from the Bible, Ramayana, legends from China, and Greek mythology. Students will have an opportunity to produce their own ideas for a short graphic narrative. This course is reading-intensive and contains mature content.
