RESEARCH INTERESTS

My scholarly activities center on two broad goals: improving the quality of treatment in couple therapy and providing high-quality training for marriage and family therapy (MFT) graduate students. My research efforts are directed toward improving treatment for couples and families by specifically investigating two important areas: (1) the treatment and healing of infidelity, and (2) the foundations and processes of therapeutic change. In my scholarship and mentoring, I draw extensively upon my expertise in qualitative research methods. My research and teaching also focus on enhancing the theoretical sophistication of MFT research and practice.
