A MESSAGE FROM PARENT AND FAMILY RELATIONS

At Texas Tech, we recognize that the parents and family members of our students are crucial members of their success teams. You have guided and supported your child from the very beginning of their lives, and that support, while it may look different as they transition to college, is just as important as ever.

With that in mind, we have prepared the Red Raider Family Guide to help you become familiar with all the facets of your student's new support network at Texas Tech. We've included information about academic tutoring, life coaching, health and wellbeing resources, talking points to help your student along the way, and other key information you'll need throughout your student's transition to Texas Tech.

Speaking of that transition, we know that the transition to college is not just about change for the students, but for their families and supporters as well. We are here to help, so know that we are only a call or an email away.

We hope you find the Red Raider Family Guide helpful. Let us know how we can assist you!

Sincerely,
Parent & Family Relations Staff

FAMILY PROGRAMS: Parent and Family Relations encourages families to visit their students throughout their time at Texas Tech. Some of the events we promote and host include: Family Weekend in the fall, Sibling Saturday in the spring, and Family Days throughout the year.

AUGUST

- Talk to your student about managing health as they are preparing to move away to college. Make sure they know their medical history as they will need to make their own appointments through Student Health Services.
- Talk about your expectations of your student as they begin college life. How often will you communicate? Your student may dive into college life, and you may not hear from them as often as you'd like. Set a time to visit through phone or online that works best for you.

- Encourage your student to take part in Raider Welcome activities to get them acclimated to campus, meeting other students, and learning about resources (free food and T-shirts are a nice bonus!)

SEPTEMBER

- Check in with your student about how they're doing in their classes. Encourage them to talk to their instructors (their office hours should be on course syllabi) or use The Learning Center or other tutoring options if there are any challenges. Asking for help is smart! Talk to your student about the importance of attending class! Make going to class every day a habit.

- Talk to your student about getting involved on campus. There are over 600 registered student organizations your student can join. They can find out more from the Student Involvement Office on campus and by reading their TechAnnounce emails (another reminder for your student to check their Texas Tech email!).

- Don't put too much pressure on your student about making friends — for some students, this takes time. Many students have life-long friendships from home, and the brief connections they have made so far just aren't the same. Encourage them to keep at it.

- Is your student getting homesick? This is normal. If you can, visit them during Family Weekend (October 24 - 26) or send them a care package or letter from home. Plan a family video call through FaceTime or Zoom.

OCTOBER

- How did your student do on midterms?
- Midterm grades will be available for first-semester students by October 27, 2025. If your student did well, congratulate them and encourage them to finish strong. If they didn't do as well as they'd hoped, remind them that they have a support network made up of great people at The Learning Center, University Coaching, and other tutoring programs on campus to help.
- Don't put too much pressure on your student to achieve a 4.0 – college is harder than high school! Instead, talk to them about their classes, what's working and what isn't, and encourage them to spend some time thinking about ways they can improve as they finish the semester. For some students, scheduling and mapping out a plan will help.
- Advance registration for spring and summer courses happens in November, so talk to your student about making an advising appointment to make sure they're prepared.

NOVEMBER

- It's time to start talking about Thanksgiving and the Winter Break. Your student will be coming back home after experiencing time away. They may have very different eating/sleeping/socializing schedules than they had before. Talk about expectations and "house rules" while acknowledging your student's new independence and growth. Think "communication" instead of "curfews."
- Enjoy family time during Thanksgiving! Final exams will occur soon after the holiday. Talk to your student about preparation for finals. Ask them what their plan is, not only for studying, but for ensuring they are getting enough sleep and are eating well heading into final exams.

DECEMBER

- The winter break is a time when new college students need to relax and reflect. Celebrate your student's successes during their first semester and encourage them to learn from the challenges they may have experienced. If your student did not do as well as hoped, know that Red Raider Academic Success, University Coaching & Student Achievement, and other support resources are standing by to help your student get back on track.

JANUARY

- Talk to your student about getting back in the swing of things for the spring semester. Ask them what classes they are most looking forward to and if there are additional involvement opportunities they want to take on, like joining a student organization, taking on a leadership role in one they're already involved in, or getting a job on campus.

- The new semester will bring new classes, new instructors, and new challenges. Students who succeeded during their first semester may feel like they know it all and may run into new challenges, while students who struggled during their first semester may be anxious. Listen to your student and offer support.

FEBRUARY

- Spring break is approaching! Talk to your student about what their plans are and how they can be safe during spring break. Some topics to discuss include driving safety (taking turns driving, not driving drowsy, sharing their ETA with others), alcohol safety (spring break is often a time students feel pressure to consume alcohol), and general travel safety if they're flying somewhere or even visiting another country.
- Students unable to travel somewhere exciting may feel left out. If you can, plan some family fun at home.

MARCH

- Advance course registration for fall will happen in April, so March is a great time for your student to schedule their advising appointments to prepare.
- Talk to your student about their upcoming summer plans. Are they coming home, or staying in Lubbock? Are they registered for summer classes either online or in person? Summer is a great time to complete an internship, job shadowing opportunity, or even get a job for the summer. Students can visit University Career Services for information on those opportunities.

APRIL

- April is a challenging month, as the fun of spring break is over and students are rapidly approaching final exams. Talk to your student about managing stress and staying healthy during this time. This is a good time to revisit the conversation about mapping out a plan for the rest of their semester and staying organized.

MAY

- After final exams are over, your Red Raider may be returning home for the summer, either completing courses online or working, or just taking time off. Enjoy that time together. You may notice more changes and growth in your student since they were at home last winter. This is a good time to revisit conversations about expectations and "house rules" while they're at home, all the while recognizing your student's growing independence.

SUMMER

- Your student may be experiencing "FOMO" (fear of missing out) while they're at home. They may miss time with new friends and the student organizations they have become involved in. They may see social media posts of friends who are hanging out together or taking fun trips over the summer. Lend a sympathetic ear and know that your student will be reengaging with friends when they return in the fall.
