About Us

The Institute for Studies in Pragmatism is the first and oldest organized center for research on the life and works of American physicist, mathematician, logician and engineer Charles Sanders Peirce (1839-1914), one of the greatest interdisciplinary scientists in history.

Its mission is to provide a collaborative space and intellectual network to experience the immediate benefits of cross-disciplinary research.

Charles S. Peirce Interdisciplinary Graduate Fellowship

Interdisciplinary Graduate Fellowship applications are now open for all doctoral level programs and disciplines at Texas Tech University.

The purpose of this fellowship is to enable young researchers to focus on and enhance the interdisciplinary nature of their studies.

How to Apply:

All applications may be submitted directly to the Institute for Studies in Pragmatism

- Letter of Intent
- Recommendation letter by the candidate's advisor
- CV
- Description of your research project
- Financial plan for requested funding
