DIRECTOR'S WELCOME

Mark Charney | Director of the School of Theatre & Dance

Our season selection committee met last year, as usual, and came up with a slate of plays, musicals, and dances that we felt were challenging, expansive, reflective of the world around us, and especially pertinent in an election year. We gave this season a theme, The Personal and the Political, based on through-lines we felt connected the plays selected and the dances to be choreographed. Celebrating the season, we even shot our first video, breaking a piñata to reveal the titles.

This was all pre-pandemic, mind you.

In June, we wrote a plan, one we hoped that would allow us to share these works with limited audience members in a reduced, safety-conscious capacity, and that offered our designers a partial build, our actors opportunities to develop characters and serve narratives all the while masked and six-feet apart. We knew these compromises were not ideal, especially for our audiences, but we believe strongly that education is best served by process, and that this season plan was educationally exciting, posing obstacles that our community is intent on creatively overcoming.

But in August, when the COVID numbers in Texas continued to increase, our Acting/Directing and Design areas revised that plan, intent on retaining our emphasis on process but also increasing measures to ensure safety. We were loathe to abandon our live audiences, and just as, if not more, upset to rehearse online. All the time, though, no matter the compromises, we were intent on making certain to privilege education for our students and we knew our audiences would understand.

Our season, The Personal and the Political has, ironically, grown both more personal and political in the last few months. Rather than be constricted by the choices made pre-pandemic, we are embracing what can only be called a fluid season, one that is continuing to evolve based not only on the world around us, but the community within the Maedgen. In an effort truly to respond to our reactions to current events, we have already abandoned some titles, chosen new ones, deconstructed others, and are consistently shifting the means by which we rehearse and share them.

Every personal decision has a political repercussion.

The works you will see this season navigate the muddy waters of the political world in which we live, even more so impacted by our personal journeys. What better way to make sense of the world in which we live than embracing art that explores the consequences of our choices while simultaneously reflecting upon our shared humanity?

This season, we hope you will join us virtually to experience the innovations and creativity of our students and faculty. We promise a season full of surprises, one like no other in the history of our program.

OUR SCHOOL

MILESTONES IN OUR HISTORY

Within a month after Texas Technical College began classes, the Sock and Buskin society began producing short plays, and by April 1926 Tech was the home of a chapter of the theatre honor society, Alpha Psi Omega.

Since its first major production, The Youngest, in May 1928, Texas Tech University Theatre has produced hundreds of plays for the Texas Tech and Lubbock communities. More than 1,000 informal and developmental productions have been presented by students, including many original scripts.

Established to serve as an educational resource for Texas Tech University and a cultural resource for the Lubbock community, Tech Theatre offered courses as early as 1930.

In April 1964, the University Theatre Building was inaugurated with a production of Romeo and Juliet in a state-of-the-art, 400-seat proscenium auditorium, and since that time the likes of Barry Corbin, G. W. Bailey, and countless others have trod across its boards. This building, now known as the Charles E. Maedgen, Jr. Theatre, has hosted over 170 University Theatre productions and many theatrical competitions.

In 1966, the Department of Speech and Theatre Arts developed a theatre specialization; it began offering theatre Bachelor and Master of Arts degrees in 1969. That year, Theatre enrolled 29 undergraduate majors and 4 Master of Arts students.
In 1972, Theatre participated in the creation of the one-of-a-kind interdisciplinary Ph.D. in Fine Arts degree and developed and offered courses for that program in 1973. Beginning with three students in 1973, the Fine Arts Doctoral program has since graduated 81 students.

Theatre Arts became an independent department in 1977 and implemented the Bachelor of Fine Arts and Master of Fine Arts degree programs in 1982. Texas Tech Theatre is one of only two theatre departments in the state to offer all the traditional degrees in Theatre Arts, the only one with an interdisciplinary Fine Arts Doctorate, and one of only three in the Southwest to offer the Ph.D.

In 1986, the University Theatre building was expanded to its present size with the addition of a suite of offices and a 100-seat, thrust-stage lab theatre.

In 1992 the Dance Division, housed up through then within Health, Physical Education and Recreation, became part of the Department of Theatre, making us the Department of Theatre and Dance. Dance continues to have a strong tradition within the Department, University, and region.

In 1998, the main-stage theatre was updated by the installation of a state-of-the-art lighting system.
Through the generosity of Mrs. Louise Maedgen, in memory of her late husband, the Department was able to begin renovations on the lobby of the Mainstage in 1999; formally dedicated in 2002 as the Charles E. Maedgen, Jr. Theatre the new lobby provides an elegant and comfortable welcome to our students and patrons.

The summer of 2000 marked the 75th Anniversary of Theatre at Texas Tech University. The celebrations were highlighted by an all class reunion and the formation of the Department’s first official alumni chapter.

2004 marked the Department’s accreditation by the National Association of Schools of Theatre. As in its beginnings, the Department of Theatre and Dance continues to remain committed to the education of young theatre artists and the production of a wide range of productions that challenge, excite, and entertain our audiences.

A new home was needed for our Dance program, and in the fall of 2012 the Creative Movement Studio was dedicated.

In 2013, the Department of Theatre and Dance replaced the old summer rep model with WildWind Performance Laboratory, a lab which offers students in theatre and dance the opportunity to experiment with the process of theatre making, giving them opportunities to study with professionals in all aspects of theatre from around the country. This signature program will continually provide students with one-on-one work with some of the best theatre and dance minds in the nation.

Ten years after NAST accreditation, in 2014, our Dance program earned accreditation by the National Association of Schools of Dance and less than one year later in the Spring of 2015 we hosted the South-Central region’s American College Dance Association conference.

In August of 2015, the Department of Theatre and Dance became the School of Theatre and Dance.

August 11, 2017, the School of Theatre and Dance broke ground on the first phase of an expansion to the facilities, to include a Black Box theatre space, scene shop expansion, two new rehearsal rooms, three classrooms, a collaboration design lab, a CADD lab, faculty offices, a new main office suite and a grand lobby.

The School of Theatre and Dance celebrated the completion of Phase One of the new Theatre and Dance Complex with a ribbon-cutting on October 4, 2019.

A few years ago, we were a Department of Theatre & Dance. Now we are a School. What does this mean?

We increased commitment to our students by significantly growing our emphasis on experiential education, so much so that we now bring in over 35 professional guests a year to educate our students. And, in turn, we send our students all over the world.

Through national and internationally-recognized programs such as WildWind, the Arts in Prague, the Marfa Intensive, and the Tennessee Williams Festival, and partnerships with schools in Hong Kong and Turkey, we further introduce our students to the professional world of theatre and dance.

Contributions to the Producers Circle are instrumental in helping us bring the world to West Texas, and introduce the world to the talent here in Lubbock.

Please think about contributing to our program.

Rest assured, your money will facilitate the next generation of artists through scholarships and innovative program-building, making TTU one of the best universities to promote excellence in the United States.

This production is entered in the Kennedy Center American College Theater Festival (KCACTF). The aims of this national theater education program are to identify and promote quality in college-level theater production. To this end, each production entered is eligible for a response by a regional KCACTF representative, and selected students and faculty are invited to participate in KCACTF programs involving scholarships, internships, grants and awards for actors, directors, dramaturgs, playwrights, designers, stage managers and critics at both the regional and national levels.

Productions entered on the Participating level are eligible for invitation to the KCACTF regional festival and may also be considered for national awards recognizing outstanding achievement in production, design, direction and performance.

Last year more than 1,500 productions were entered in the KCACTF involving more than 200,000 students nationwide. By entering this production, our theater department is sharing in the KCACTF goals to recognize, reward, and celebrate the exemplary work produced in college and university theaters across the nation.

A NOTE ABOUT THE BLUE FLOWER

Sarah Johnson | Dramaturg

Early in our process, I asked the cast to define the word “fantastic” in their own words. Most definitions we came up with lived in one of two camps: a word describing something as excellent or a word describing something from human imagination, outside the realm of our real world. This play lives up to both those definitions. The world of The Blue Flower helps us escape from our own. Wolves who speak, witches, and ghostly kings inhabit the world of the play and magic functions as easily as gravity. In this tumultuous time, it can be tempting to run away into fantasy. However, Bryce Real has created a story in this fantastical world that resonates with our lived experiences. As our hero navigates his journey, questions about inequality, oppression, and toxic cultural values play out in real time.

As our season moved to virtual spaces in this time of pandemic, this play’s first production takes up an even more intense fractured reality: a play set in a fantastical world, performed on a virtual stage. The limitations caused by digital theatre are here accompanied by opportunity. Reality is questioned on multiple fronts. The digital, the real, and the magical confront one another and ask us to think critically about the story through both its content and mode of delivery. As actors perform what we are starting to call “Zoom magic,” using the limitations of the two dimensional screen to facilitate actions that defy the ordinary limitations of space and time, we wrestle with how this play both functions within our lived reality and outside of it. We experience the fantastical in new and bold ways.

A NOTE ABOUT AN ENEMY OF THE PEOPLE

Bradley Hewlett | Dramaturg

As we sit, often uneasily, within the Information Age we are frequently challenged to form opinions on critical issues facing our family, community, state, nation, and world without being entirely certain that we have all of the facts. Often, we may be strained to explain what constitutes a fact or how to make sense of competing interpretations of seemingly jumbled webs of facts being stretched by the tension of competing moral claims.

Henrik Ibsen (1828-1906) wrote his version of An Enemy of the People in 1882 as he was facing negative public reactions to his discussion of the realities of sexually transmitted disease in his previous play Ghosts. Through the character of Dr. Tomas Stockman, Ibsen was able to show how those who champion facts can be left to stand alone when those facts conflict with the interests and motives of larger or more powerful groups. As further evidence of his understanding of the dramatic form, he was able to humanize such conflicts by locating them within the dynamics of an extended family.
In his new version of the play, Brad Birch has translated this core conflict into a modern context. A context in which the suppression of information is becoming less about direct force and intimidation and more about unseen manipulations and distortions. A context in which economic, social, and political motives are entangled in a web that moves at digital speed. A context in which the gag has been replaced by the RRRRRRRR.

Our production of An Enemy of the People does not claim to offer solutions to the problems that arise when the freedom of information is weighed against concerns of reliability and the consequences of control. However, we do hope to engage our audience in a decentralized conversation about these issues that have both immediate and far-reaching implications for our world. Without overly taxing our imaginations, we can suppose that at this very moment somewhere in the world someone is struggling for the right to speak the facts as they understand them while, at the very same time somewhere else, another person is reeling from the consequences of actions taken on the basis of distorted information. Where should the gates be placed? Who should be the gatekeepers? What rules should govern their operation? Why have gates at all? How do we RRRRRRRR?
